HITLER RECEIVES WELLES FOR TALK OF GREAT IMPORT

President Roosevelt's Fact-Finding Representative Enters Immense Chancellery

LITTLE IS HOPED FOR

Der Fuehrer Expected To Re-iterate What Von Ribbentrop Said

By Pierre J. Huss

I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

BERLIN, Mar. 2.—For a meeting of great moment—although it held no auguries of peace—Chancellor Adolf Hitler today received Sumner Welles, American Undersecretary of State.

As President Roosevelt's fact-finding representative disappeared behind the doors of Hitler's immense chancellery in Berlin for his second visit to a totalitarian dictator, observers predicted that the outcome would be a repetition of Welles's talk yesterday with Foreign Minister Joachim Von Ribbentrop.

Germany's demands, as outlined by Von Ribbentrop, include Britain's relinquishment of control of the earth's sea lanes, and an end to British interference in Central Europe.

Der Fuehrer was expected not only to reiterate what Von Ribbentrop said, but to put the Reich's demands in even stronger terms.

One of Hitler's adjutants called for Welles at the latter's hotel in a car.

Following in another automobile was Alexander C. Kirk, charge d'affaires at the American Embassy.

Three Destroyers and Cutter Rush To Aid Freighter

WASHINGTON, Mar. 2.—(INS)—The Navy Department announced early today that three United States destroyers and a Coast Guard cutter were rushing under forced draft to the aid of the British freighter Southgate, reported attacked by a submarine near San Juan, Puerto Rico.

Exact position of the rescue vessels, apparently part of the neutrality patrol, was not immediately disclosed by the Navy Department. They were ordered to proceed immediately to the scene of the reported attack after the Southgate's distress signal was picked up by radio.

Naval communication officials estimated the Southgate was within the 300-mile neutrality zone proclaimed by the Panama conference when her message was received by Mackay Radio last evening from the Coast Guard cutter Unalaga, at San Juan.

Dispatch of the three destroyers to the scene of the reported attack was announced by Lt. Comdr. L. B. Austin, in charge of naval press communications.

He said he was unable to disclose the position of the three vessels at the time, but the Department estimated that the cutter Unalaga was about 10 hours from the freighter.

Governor Long To Try To Strip Office of Power

BATON ROUGE, La., Mar. 2.—(INS)—Defeated at the polls, Gov. Earl K. Long today strove to muster a legislative quorum to strip his own office of much of its power before he leaves it.

The Governor failed in his first effort to bring the legislators together for action yesterday afternoon, but immediately issued another proclamation ordering the solons to convene this morning.

Before the legislators for passage when they meet will be measures to repeal laws which entrenched the dictatorship of the present Governor's brother, the late Huey Long.

Gov. Long also has recommended a $2,000,000 program for free school lunches, a State bank to aid farmers, and other appropriations, the financing of which would be left to his successor, Sam Houston Jones.

Jones, 42-year-old Lake Charles attorney, defeated Long in the Democratic run-off primary, tantamount to election, in what was regarded as the fall of the dictatorship set up by Huey Long 12 years ago. Jones will take office May 14.

The chief sections of the proclamation calling the Legislature recommended the repeal of laws which permitted the Governor to supercede the district attorneys by appointing a "state prosecuting officer in certain cases."

German Airplanes Attack British Ships

LONDON, Mar. 2.—(INS)—German airplanes roared across the North Sea again today, making a series of attacks on British shipping and shaking Scotland's shores with the roar of bombs and rattle of machine gun fire.

Explosions were heard before dawn, and for hours reports of attacks and dog fights, as Royal Air Force planes sped aloft to intercept the Germans, poured into the Air Ministry.

Ships returning to ports said they were attacked by German machines south of Ambie, Scotland, and British warships assisted in repelling the German. Another report said British and German machines fought about nine miles to sea in the same area.

IT WAS JUST AN ERROR

No, folks! Marty Green's Army and Navy Store is not selling "Men's Work-Dress Sox" as advertised in the Courier yesterday. The advertisement should have read "Men's Work-Dress Sox" but due to illegibility of copy, the copy holder thought that a "k" was an "n" and thus the error. Mr. Green is offering many specials at his Bristol store and is advertising a "Daily Hot Shot" every day in the Courier.

Girl Burned at College Dance
Haverford, Mar. 2.—Margaret Williams, 18, of Wynnewood, was burned seriously at a Haverford College dance early today when her dress caught fire in a girls' cloak room.

Miss Williams was waiting for her wraps, preparatory to leaving the dance, when her skirt suddenly went up in flames. A Bryn Mawr student extinguished the blaze by throwing a coat around the girl, and she was carried to the college infirmary. Later she was taken to Bryn Mawr Hospital.

College authorities said Miss Williams' dress caught fire from a heater in the cloak room.

Reich Must Rule Europe

Berlin, Mar. 2.—From Adolf Hitler himself, American under Secretary of State Sumner Welles today heard officially that Germany will never abandon her war against England until the Reich rules central Europe single-handed and a place is made for her on the trade routes of the world.

No time was permitted for discussion of possible American mediation during the one hour and twenty-five minute "speech" delivered to his American diplomatic audience.

Instead, Hitler reiterated and amplified the Nazi war argument voiced to Welles yesterday by Foreign Minister Von Ribbentrop. Presumably he harked back to his address in Munich last Saturday, when he made known for the first time that Germany regards as her "Lebensraum" every last spot in Europe that was "built by German hands."

The Fuehrer insisted that Germany was fighting only because England started the war, made emphatically clear that no peace would be acceptable that failed to meet the conditions laid down so many times by spokesmen for the Reich.

The main principles of these conditions is to break once and for all "the strangle hold" that Britain allegedly holds on Europe and the world.

Are They Afraid of Being Called "Sissy"?

(By "The Stroller")

We would like to ask a question of the men who shop in the self-service markets of Bristol: "Why do the men constantly pass up the 'baby-carriage baskets'?"

It seems to be the habit of most men when they enter to either reach for a basket to carry under an arm, or else to secure a carton which they cart from one section of the store to the other. But the baskets on their wheeled carriages are used mainly by the women.

Can it be that the men think this might make them appear "sissified?"

Sponsored by the Pennsylvania Ayrshire Breeders' Association, working in conjunction with the Bucks-Montgomery Ayrshire Breeders' Association, of which Leon Bish-p, of near Blooming Glen, is the president, the first of a series of meetings to be held throughout the State took place in the community hall, Blooming Glen, Tuesday.

Between 40 and 45 Ayrshire breeders from the two counties attended the meeting, the purpose of which was to hear Thomas P. Whittaker, Brandon, Vt., field representative of the National Ayrshire Breeders' Association, discuss various topics of interest to breeders of Ayrshire cattle.

Chief of these topics was the method of selection of herd sires, and in this connection Mr. Whittaker pointed out that the Ayrshire breed is noted for its production of milk with a 4 per cent butterfat content. Mr. Whittaker made it quite emphatic that if the breeders of Ayrshire cattle desire to continue the production of milk with a 4 per cent butterfat yield, they will have to select their sires with care or from families producing 4 per cent milk and not from low testing cows.

Mr. Whittaker pointed out also that Pennsylvania ranks second in the United States for the total number of Ayrshire cows and first in the number of cows on test, or for the keeping of records relating to milk and butterfat production.

Another speaker at the meeting, which was in charge of Mr. Bishop, was Professor L. W. Ingham, a member of the staff of National Farm School, near Doylestown, where one of the leading Ayrshire herds in Bucks county is maintained.

An invitation from the Bristol Exchange Club to attend a meeting on April 25th, was accepted by the Newtown Exchange Club at a meeting at the Temperance House, Newtown.

NATURAL REGIONS OF STATE ARE STUDIED

Croydon 7th Grade Draws Maps of Such; Lower Grades Learn to Tell the Time

WATCH HEALTH CHART

This is one of a series of articles dealing with the activities in the schools throughout this area.

CROYDON, Mar. 2.—Miss Mary Warner, who teaches geography and spelling in the upper four grades at Croydon public school, has been leading seventh graders in a study of Pennsylvania, they having completed maps showing the natural regions. These pupils are at present studying the cities of their home state. The time of grade six in geography class is being occupied by study of the Balkan peninsula, following the importance of the Balkans in the world today. Fifth grade is interested at present in the Southern states; while eighth grade is following world geography, concentrating on petroleum just now.

Time really means something to the tots of grades two and portion of grade three, whom Miss Louise Stewart instructs in the public school here. When the classes completed their study of time recently all had been taught to tell time by the class-room clock. As a further aid in this work many made wall-clocks, using cardboard plates for faces on which the numerals and hands were drawn, while the pendulums were comprised of two pine cones.

An innovation in this room is a picture honor roll, on which appears each week the snap-shots of those pupils who have done outstanding work for the week.

There appears in each room at Croydon school a height and weight chart, on which are recorded the gains in height, and the gains or losses in weight of each child. Twice a year are they checked for height, and once monthly they are weighed. This work is in charge of Henry Morgan, who is aided by the various teachers.

FIND GREENBERG GUILTY ON TWO OF THE CHARGES

Owner of Black Cat Inn Collapses An Hour Before Jury Gives Verdict

THEN A HEART ATTACK

Wife Faints and Son Becomes Hysterical As Verdict Is Announced

DOYLESTOWN, Mar. 2.—Adam Greenberg, 55, collapsed one hour prior to hearing a jury pronounce him guilty on two of four counts in connection with the burning of the Black Cat Inn, Plumsteadville, of which he was owner. He was revived but suffered a heart attack when the verdict was announced, the great shock placing him as a patient in Doylestown Emergency Hospital.

The court-room last midnight was thrown into an uproar with the announcement—Greenberg's wife, Hannah, fainting; their son, Joseph Greenberg, becoming hysterical, and Joseph's bride clinging to him.

Greenberg, tense and under great strain from the trial which lasted seven days, was a bunch of nerves as the hours dragged on. The jury had deliberated four hours when at 11 o'clock last night Greenberg collapsed. A physician was summoned, and revived the man. An hour later when the jury returned, and its findings given, Greenberg overcame by the shock suffered the heart attack, and was removed at once to the hospital.

The two counts on which the man was found guilty are the less serious of the four. He was found guilty on charge of arson of a building and aiding in the commission of arson of a building; and acquitted on charges of arson of a dwelling and aiding in commission of arson of a dwelling.

During the seven-day trial, over 1,000 pages of testimony were taken.

Immediately after the verdict, Greenberg, whose Black Cat Inn was damaged by fire on October 6, 1938, applied for a new trial, through his counsel. This was Greenberg's second trial on the charge, he having been convicted in 1939, and then granted a new trial because of a technical error made by the judge in the charge to the jury.

No motive was proved in the trial, and yesterday the entire time was spent in summing up. The commonwealth's theory was that there were seven separate and distinct fires; while the theory of the defense was that it all resulted from a main fire in the kitchen, and that the blaze was not incendiary. The defense witnesses admitted there were cans of kerosene in the building, but that these were used for cleaning windows and riding the place of some vermin.

Joseph Schmidt, of Bucksville, testified for the defense. He stated that he often took his wife and family to the Black Cat Inn and that it was a "first class place." The witness also testified as to Greenberg's reputation. Robert Flack, Doylestown carpenter; William Ghegan, Mechanicsville farmer; Charles Price, farmer; Deputy Prothonotary Horace T. Myers, Buckingham; Frank H. Rice, farmer and a neighbor of Greenberg for 27 years; Eugene Bartelman, of Buckingham, all testified that Greenberg's reputation is "good."

William Simmler, Deputy Chief Engineer of the Philadelphia Fire Department, the "No. 2 man" in Philadelphia's fire department, who has been active in fire investigation work for 34 years, dealing with over 5000 fires, was called as an expert witness for the defense this morning and was examined by Attorney Getz.

"I examined the Black Cat Inn on November 5, 1939, staying there about an hour," Chief Simmler testified.

District Attorney Bleister objected to the Chief testifying as to his opinion as to where the Black Cat fire originated, on grounds that the examination took place too long after the fire.

Another side bar conference followed. Chief Simmler, who conducted a fire school for a number of years, testified that a fire originating in one portion of a building could very easily spread to another or extreme portion of the same building without an intervening fire, and that he has seen thousands of such cases.

Court recessed for five minutes and Chief Simmler was turned over to District Attorney Bleister for cross-examination, after the Commonwealth "went into a huddle" before questioning the Philadelphia fire expert, whose entire testimony indicated that in his opinion the fire at the Black Cat could have spread from one original outburst of flame.

Incidentally, Chief Simmler, 56, is the youngest Spanish American War veteran in the United

SATURDAY, MARCH 2, 1940

MARCH

Ah, March, we know thou art
Kind-hearted, spite of ugly looks and threats
And out of sight, art nursing April's violet.

So wrote Helen Hunt Jackson, paying tribute less to the benevolence of March than to the capacity of right-minded humans to look beyond immediate troubles to hoped-for better times ahead.

March often has been accused of fickleness and disappointing conduct because of the eagerness of people to be done with winter and to get on to spring. March is not a spring month except in that small part that lies beyond the vernal equinox which comes regularly about the twenty-first. So it often happens that in March northern latitudes experience some of the coldest weather of the year and some of the heaviest snow storms.

Nevertheless, March is a month of promises. The sun is climbing higher and shadows shorten and impart a sense of impending spring even when the air is chilly. And the trees and shrubs sense the change and get ready for the grand opening in which the decorations will be resplendent with buds and blossoms.

So treasure the hopes of March, although at times they may seem elusive. Hope is the mainstay of the human spirit in this world of trouble.

BOTH FAIRS WILL REOPEN

San Francisco and New York Fairs will reopen in the spring for another season. Decision to continue the San Francisco Fair was reached several days ago.

More than half the nations which were exhibitors last year have signed agreements with the New York Fair. There have been serious defections; and there is no present assurance that Great Britain will be among those on hand. The cost of the British pavilion ran to $300,000, and Britain is putting all of its dollars in America to account for war needs. The Manhattan press speaks of the Fair now as suggestive of the hopes for a more secure civilization which alone make the world's present agony endurable. The British, however, may be impelled to face more immediate realities.

Argentina, well away from the war, will not be among those that return. In common with other foreign exhibitors, Argentina last year was subjected to the most merciless, exorbitant and senseless series of demands ever made on exhibitors by labor. Charles Stevenson, in the lead article in the January Atlantic Monthly, cites the experience of Argentina's architect with a 9x12 new wall map, built for $800 by the high cost priced firm in Buenos Aires, an costing another $8,857 to repair and install at the Fair because of union exactions, including five days' hire for three motor trucks at $750, an employment of 21 men, more than half of them at overtime for 19 hour a day.

The Stevenson story is a long but compact recital of incidents of which Argentina's is typical. Of some of the nations, Stevenson says the preferred to pay up rather than protest, and in this category was Britain. The war would be a preponderant factor in a British decision not to reopen the pavilion. But the recollection of the common experience with labor a year ago must have a contributing weight.

The CAIRO GARTER MURDERS

By VAN WYCK MASON

SYNOPSIS

Assisting Major Bruce Kilgour of the British Intelligence Service on a special assignment, Captain Hugh North, of G-2, U. S. Army Intelligence, boards the S. S. Fort Lucknow at sea, in the dead of night. Kilgour keeps him in ignorance regarding their mission except to infer that Sir George Ruthven, in Cairo, will enlighten the Captain. North is instructed to act as though he and Kilgour are strangers. Next day, M. Levasseur, a sardonic Frenchman, is extremely curious to learn why the ship stopped during the night. Evasively North answers, "I hadn't heard it." Dr. Larkin Ladd, noted Egyptologist and head of Lawrence College in Cairo, joins them. Then Richard Follonsbee introduces himself. The latter claims he sells sewing machines and reapers for Heinemann and Schlager. North is instantly interested for that concern manufactures arms. Levasseur, too, lost his look of boredom. Only Dr. Ladd seems disinterested. Follonsbee, seized with an attack of belated caution, is relieved when Lolita Ladd appears.

CHAPTER III

Bald head gleam, Dr. Ladd got to his feet. "You look lovelier than usual, my dear." Then, addressing the men, he asked, "You have met my daughter?"

"A pleasure and a privilege," Levasseur raised the girl's delicately brown fingers to lips neither red nor generous. "One has heard much of the distinguished scholar who is president of Lawrence College, but never that he possesses so charming a daughter."

"Life is full of surprises, Levasseur, and some of them are pleasant."

It appeared that Lolita Ladd had just received an A. B. from Smith and was on her way south to do office work at Lawrence College. Like Follonsbee and most of the passengers aboard she had sailed from Southampton.

"You'll drop in for a tea dance at the Hotel du Nil?" the young man begged. "I hear there's a fine orchestra—that's one reason I'm going there. We'll show the Egyptians a few new steps."

"I'd love to," Lolita replied eagerly. "Dancing is my big weakness."

"It's a date," Follonsbee cried, noting North's gaze stray, demanded heartily, "Someone you know?"

For North did not remove his eyes from a distant door. "Perhaps."

"A friend?" suggested Levasseur. "An acquaintance at least. I last saw Stag in China, a couple of years ago. But I didn't get a good look. I may be mistaken."

"What's his name? Perhaps Mr. Follonsbee or I may know him," Lolita said.

Colonel Melhorne, Sturtevant Melhorne, but he's generally known as Stag."

The Frenchman's dry-looking face became quickly raised. "Stag Melhorne? Somewhere before I have heard the name?"

"Maybe. Stag gets about."

Further speculations were terminated by the arrival of Bruce Kilgour, very British and red faced in well-tailored evening clothes.

"An interesting type," Levasseur murmured. "Official to his fingertips."

"Looks like a stuffed shirt to me," North said with such clarity that Kilgour's ears reddened.

He snarled by, however, without casting more than the most cursory of glances at North's table. He even raised his nose a haughty half inch as if passing some vaguely displeasing object.

almost beautiful, had she dressed with less severe simplicity and applied a touch of make-up here and there.

"This is Dairdre Clark, my cabin mate and shining example of seaworthiness," the Ladd girl smiled. "Her brother Tim is American vice-consul at Mast-El-Kahira."

"Kahira?" Across North's bronzed forehead crept a puzzled wrinkle.

"That is the Arabic word for Cairo," laughed Levasseur, getting to his feet slowly. "Well, mes amis, it is blowing harder. Perhaps I would be wise to go below and close my porthole. One trusts, mon capitaine, that we shall meet again at the dinner table. And you, Monsieur Follonsbee, I hope will honor me with any questions about Cairo you feel like putting. It is difficult, yes,

North beheld such a perfect cameo of a profile, such a gleaming casque of reddish-brown hair. The lines of Natika Black's white evening dress fell away from the supple perfection of her form as clay under a sculptor's thumb falls away from a model. Her only jewelry was a glowing ruby-and-platinum spray which secured a single white orchid to her left shoulder. Calmly aloof, this young woman was, with precise little motions, spreading caviar on bits of toast melba, apparently oblivious to hopeful glances from adjoining tables.

"Good evening, mes amis." At that moment M. Levasseur came up from the left with a preoccupied gleam in his pale gray eyes but wearing a pleasant smile nonetheless. Apparently he was of no small one might say, a very difficult city, especially for those, er—in the hard-way trade."

"Since the Captain isn't here, suppose I do the honors," suggested Follonsbee before introducing Captain North. . . .

Before Lolita Ladd could voice a tactful protest the dry-faced fellow had started away. . . . Young Follonsbee tossed a five-pound note onto the table and ordered yet another round of drinks.

"Drink up, boys and girls," he invited a trifle loudly, "then let's be shoving on. We'll be about the last ones down for dinner. I'd rather stay on Captain Diston's good side."

"Oh, come now, Dick! You know perfectly well the captain isn't coming below on a foul night like this."

In a graceful movement Lolita cocked her bright head a little to one side. "Come clean now—confess you've just remembered our fascinating table mate, Miss Black."

Once the party gained a sumptuous but sparsely populated dining saloon the man from G-2 understood Lolita Ladd's jibe. Significantly many masculine glances were converging on a regal figure seated at the captain's table.

"Well, Captain," Lolita made a wry little face, "here's where we nice sensible home girls get our 'hail and farewell!' Not that we blame you. Behold Natika Black. Isn't she the stunningest thing you ever saw?"

"Miss Black certainly is a balm to the optic nerve," North admitted once his look rested upon a definitely arresting figure occupying a chair at the far end of the gaily-decorated table.

Not in many a blue moon had even so observant a connoisseur as Hugh importance for the chief steward himself pulled out the Frenchman's chair.

Follonsbee, a trifle unsteady, made a profound bow to Miss Black ere he led forward Hugh North.

"Since the captain isn't here, suppose I do the honors?"

Pleasantly but with reserve Natika Black acknowledged the presentation and fixed upon the wiry figure before her a slow, cool look directed from beneath brows which swept far out over her eyes like swallow's wings.

"And now may I present Monsieur Phillipides, a distinguished fellow traveler?" Turning, she smiled upon a very handsome 'd man whose aristocratic beak of a nose jutted out over a full and carefully trimmed white beard.

"Ah," said he, "it is nice to see you again Monsieur Levasseur. Perhaps we can resume our discussion of the Donotie inscription on the steel of Khen Amun?"

Levasseur bowed with respect. "One would not dream of arguing with so recognized an authority."

"Who usually sits in these vacant places?" North queried, dropping into a chair beside Lolita Ladd.

"Those who are gone—but to return again, if this beastly storm lets up!" you'll see them all tomorrow, including my exotic new stepmother."

She tried to speak gaily but failed by a noticeable margin. "Where Dad is I haven't the vaguest idea. He's never sick."

Only Dr. Ladd seems disinterested. Follonsbee, seized with an attack of belated caution, is relieved when Lolita Ladd appears, and changes the subject. North is surprised to see Colonel Stag Melhorne, soldier of fortune, aboard. The party adjourns for dinner where they are all seated at Captain Diston's table. There North meet the stunning Natika Black and Monsieur Phillipides, a sharp-featured aristocratic-looking old man.

CHAPTER IV

"Your pardon, Captain," M. Phillipides began ere North could devote his attention to this Miss Black who bore so English a patronym but whose bearing suggested a Parisian or Greek background more than anything else. "Your name somehow seems not unfamiliar. Where can I have heard of it? At the Duke of Cockburn's grouse moor, perhaps?"

Beneath his smartly tailored dinner jacket Captain North's shoulders rose in a small shrug. "I'm afflicted with a horrible memory for names myself. Perhaps I could recall if you'd tell me your—er—principal interest—"

A benign, almost fatherly smile creased M. Phillipides' baby pink face. "I was once president of the Italo-Hellenic Chemical Works. We manufactured aniline dyes. Perhaps you recall?"

North did, but permitted no trace of that recollection to become visible. All too vividly he relived some definitely unpleasant hours in Budapest during a rather deadly skirmish against a group of munitions barons with indurated consciences. Um! Even the stupidest of Continental Intelligence officers was aware that poison gas rather than dye was the Italo-Hellenic Company's major product.

"Sorry," decisively Hugh North's narrow black head shook. "Chemistry and dyes don't mean a thing to me."

"Hilar," M. Phillipides lamented. "Incidentally I have retired and have found other interests. What good is it to work oneself into the grave? I wonder that you do not also retire, Captain. Surely so strenuous a life—"

"Strenuous? But I've told you nothing—"

"There is no need," remarked M. Phillipides gently. "You are a restless, driving sort of a man—like so many of you Americans. Energy is written all over you—but unlike our young friend Monsieur Follonsbee, you do not let your tongue or your vitality run away with you. You go on vacation?"

"A good guess," admitted the American, sprinkling a little grated onion on his strip of raw tuna. "I'm looking forward to seeing Egypt."

M. Phillipides cast a swift glance at M. Levasseur who was placidly if audibly enjoying a melon à sauterne.

"In that case perhaps you will do me the great honor of visiting my dahabeah? Upon it I have some antiquities of great interest—and of some little value. That is, of course, if you are to be in the vicinity of Cairo."

North beamed, while silently cursing this so subtly inquisitive old gentleman with the priceless black

"Surely, you must have known it was about three when the ship stopped," observed Natika fencing with North. . . .

pearls set in his shirt's bosom. Somehow he felt relieved that M. Phillipides' voice could not carry far over the thunder of waves along the Fort Lucknow's beam.

Though Miss Black meanwhile had uttered not a syllable, Hugh North was conscious nonetheless of a subtle scrutiny.

"It must have been you who boarded the Fort Lucknow last night, wasn't it?" was the first thing she said, thereby disconcerting even so practiced a conversationalist as the man from G-2.

"What makes you think so?" "Deductive reasoning," she drawled, a glass of burgundy poised before lips no less colorful. "You have not been seen aboard before today—yet you obviously haven't been seasick. Ergo—you came aboard very mysteriously off Gibraltar. Am I a good detective?"

"In theory, yes," he admitted lightly. "Yet I'm scarcely important enough to stop a liner at sea. No, I was all in when I came aboard and I've been loafing in my cabin."

Her eyes, large and of a rich golden brown, engaged his as deliberately as the foil of a fencer engages that of an opponent. "Surely you must have known that it was about three when the ship stopped?"

"Surely I didn't," was North's pleasant disclaimer as friendly little creases appeared at the corners of his eyes.

"That's a lovely tan you got in your cabin," Natika Black remarked as a table steward placed before her a filet mignon.

"Thanks to a sun lamp," North fenced desperately. Somehow the directness of this girl's attack was disconcerting.

As the entrée was being cleared away, Lolita Ladd uttered a relieved sigh. "Well, here's Dad at last. I was beginning to think Zara had been taken very sick."

As he approached the table Dr. Ladd donned a pair of pince-nez attached to the end of a dark ribbon and smiled on the table as a whole.

"Good evening, Levasseur; Monsieur Phillipides, how are you?" Blinking uncertainly, he paused, clutching the back of his chair and yielding ungraciously to the ship's motion. "Well, Lord bless my soul! Only our Egyptian friend, Bon Yamen Hasid, and Zara are missing. A nearly full table just when I imagined it would be deserted. So much for the fallibility of human judgment!"

"Good evening, Miss Black. Feeling all right, Follonsbee? Well, Dairdre, hope you've been keeping my crazy daughter out of mischief."

A picture of unaffected anticipation was Dr. Ladd as he plumped himself down opposite North and ordered tomato juice, planked steak and apple pie.

"And your so charming wife, where is she?" was M. Phillipides' courteous inquiry.

"Poor Mrs. L. thought it wise not to—er—fly in the face of Providence. She is taking dinner on deck."

The meal progressed pleasantly enough and North began to be increasingly interested in Dr. Ladd and Lawrence College.

"We aim at somewhat the same goal as Roberts College near Istanbul," Lolita's father explained, in a manner very earnest and engaging.

"Regarding educational problems it would astound most of you how very tolerant and progressive many Mohammedans have become since the war. We find it tremendously interesting to watch these young Orientals absorb and apply our Western knowledge."

M. Phillipides blinked over his champagne glass. "You could teach them even more about their own history. Doctor Ladd, Captain, is a great authority on archaic hieroglyphics. He aspires to become the greatest."

The Clark girl interrupted. "Ispy Captain Diston! The weather must be letting up."

NEWBURGH HOCKEY TEAM TO INVADE WASHINGTON

Newburgh, N. Y., will invade Washington, D. C., this week-end for a pair of roller hockey games, while Reading, Pa., will play hosts to the Mt. Gretna Tigers in another Eastern Roller Hockey League game Sunday.

Newburgh will face off against the Caps on the Capitol Casino rink this afternoon in a game which may decide the eastern division representative in the league championship play-offs. Due to the long jump from New York State, the Arrows are playing the two games on the same trip.

The Reading-Mt. Gretna clash tomorrow afternoon promises plenty of fireworks for the Brewers lost to the Tigers 3 to 0 at Mt. Gretna two weeks ago in a riotous game. Fists flew and when it was all over Reading vowed to even the score on its home rink at Sinking Springs.

The Brewers, now only one point behind Croxdon, are fighting hard for a spot in the play-offs and are anxious to climb into second place at Mt. Gretna's expense on Sunday.

TO DECIDE THIRD PLACE WINNERS

The officials of the Bristol Basketball League have decided to have the Manhattan and Profy teams clash Monday night in order to decide the third place winner. The winner of this tilt will play Rohm and Haas in a three-game series and the winner of this series meets the Grundy team for the championship.

The preliminary game has not as yet been definitely decided. According to the present arrangements, the Fifth Ward Sporting Club will meet the St. Francis Industrial School boys but the latter has not confirmed the game.

Cunningham Falls in AAU Race

News of the Day Now

Glenn Cunningham, former king of the milers, battling Chuck Fenske, the new monarch, for the lead in the tenth lap of the National A.A.U. mile run in New York, trips and falls. Gene Venzke and Louis Zamperini almost trip over him as they flash by while Cunningham executes a backward somersault. The Kansan courageously got up and came in fourth behind Fenske, Venzke and Zamperini in that order.

BOWLING SCORES

Barton's were defeated by Grundy's, three points to one. High three for Grundy's were rolled by Antonelli, a total of 527. Pearson, of Barton's, rolled a total of 554.

Badenhausen and Hall-Aircraft split their points, each winning two points. High for Badenhausen was Jones, rolling a total of 538. Scammell, of Hall's, rolled a total of 509.

Rohm & Haas, winners of the first half of American Bowling League, defeated Asco three points out of a possible four. High individual three games for R. & H. were obtained by Phipps, 531; for Asco, Milnor, 594. The highlight of the evening was a game of 1023, bowled by R. & H. and the B. B. C. team and the J. A. C. team split their four points, each team winning two points. High three for B. B. C. were rolled by Yeagle, 585; for J. A. C., Keating, 506.

The boys from Jersey are still setting the pace in the league this half. They defeated Barton's four points. Shumard, of Burlington, rolled 555 for their high individual total, and Bailey, of Barton's, rolled 517.

May Place Complete Anti-Guffey Slate in Field

By Raymond Wilcoxe
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

HARRISBURG, Mar. 2.—(INS)—The possibility of a complete anti-Guffey slate in the Democratic primary appeared today to hinge on whether Walter A. Jones, Pittsburgh financier and chairman of the Pennsylvania Turnpike Commission, would run for United States Senator.

At his Pittsburgh home Jones said he would probably make his decision today. All nominating petitions must be filed at Harrisburg by five p. m. Monday.

If Jones decided to accept the offer of the anti-Guffey forces, headed by Democratic State Chairman David L. Lawrence, he would head a slate, it was said, including in addition to himself former public utility commissioner Donald M. Livingston, of Media, for auditor general, and former State Insurance Commissioner Owen B. Hunt, of Philadelphia, for State Treasurer.

Livingston filed his nominating petitions yesterday, assuring a Democratic race with State Treasurer F. Clair Ross, who filed almost at the same time. Ross, a Guffey adherent who has shied away from any book-up with his former political mentor, was surprised by Livingston's action. He had earlier expressed the belief he would have no opposition. He can not run for re-election.

Senator Guffey, who seeks re-election, filed his nominating petitions a few days ago with the declaration that he believed in an "open primary." He failed to obtain the endorsement of the Democratic State Committee. He discounted talk of a Guffey slate, saying "I am running only for Senator."

Van's Fishing Club Places Third in Contest

Thursday night, Van's Fishing Club team placed third out of eight of the best plug-casting teams in the East, in competition at the Sportsmen's Show in Philadelphia.

Last night, in the expert class, the club, represented by Ollie Hobbs; his son, Homer, aged 16; and Walter Paullette, won first and second prizes, Ollie attaining 92 points, and Homer trailing his father with a score of 90. Third place went to Mr. Allen, of the Dover Fishing Club. All received worthwhile prizes.

Tonight the Hobbs duo and Paulette will cast for further prizes and laurels in the finals.
